My name is Tiago.

I was born here.

But I grew up here.

Recife, PE

Imbituba, SC

Did basic and intermediate English
there, during
many years.

Imbituba, SC

Did basic and
intermediate English
there, during
many years.

Then we received a German exchange student, who stayed with us for one year.

Imbituba, SC

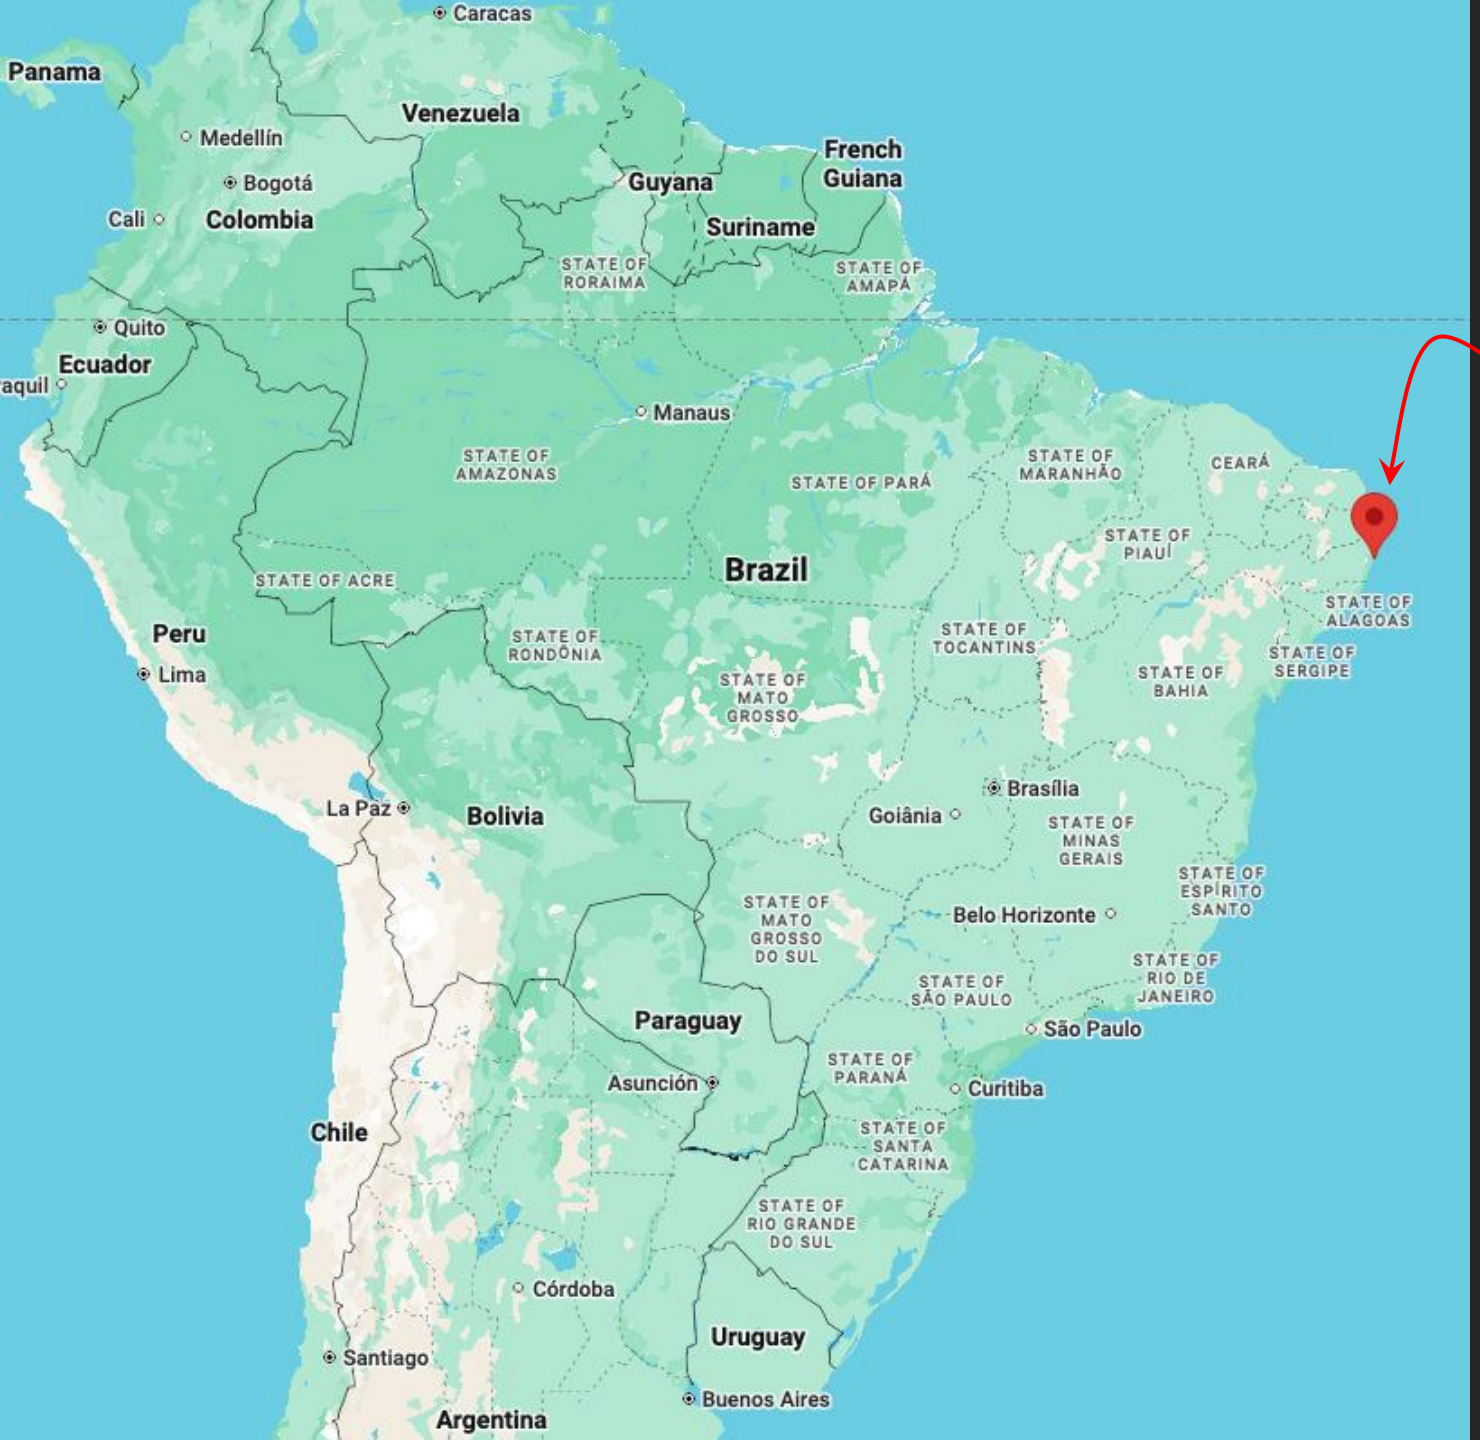

Impact on my English skills

Did basic and intermediate English there, during many years.

<<

Then we received a German exchange student, who stayed with us for one year.

Imbituba, SC

At some point I went back here. High school and university (Electronics Engineering).

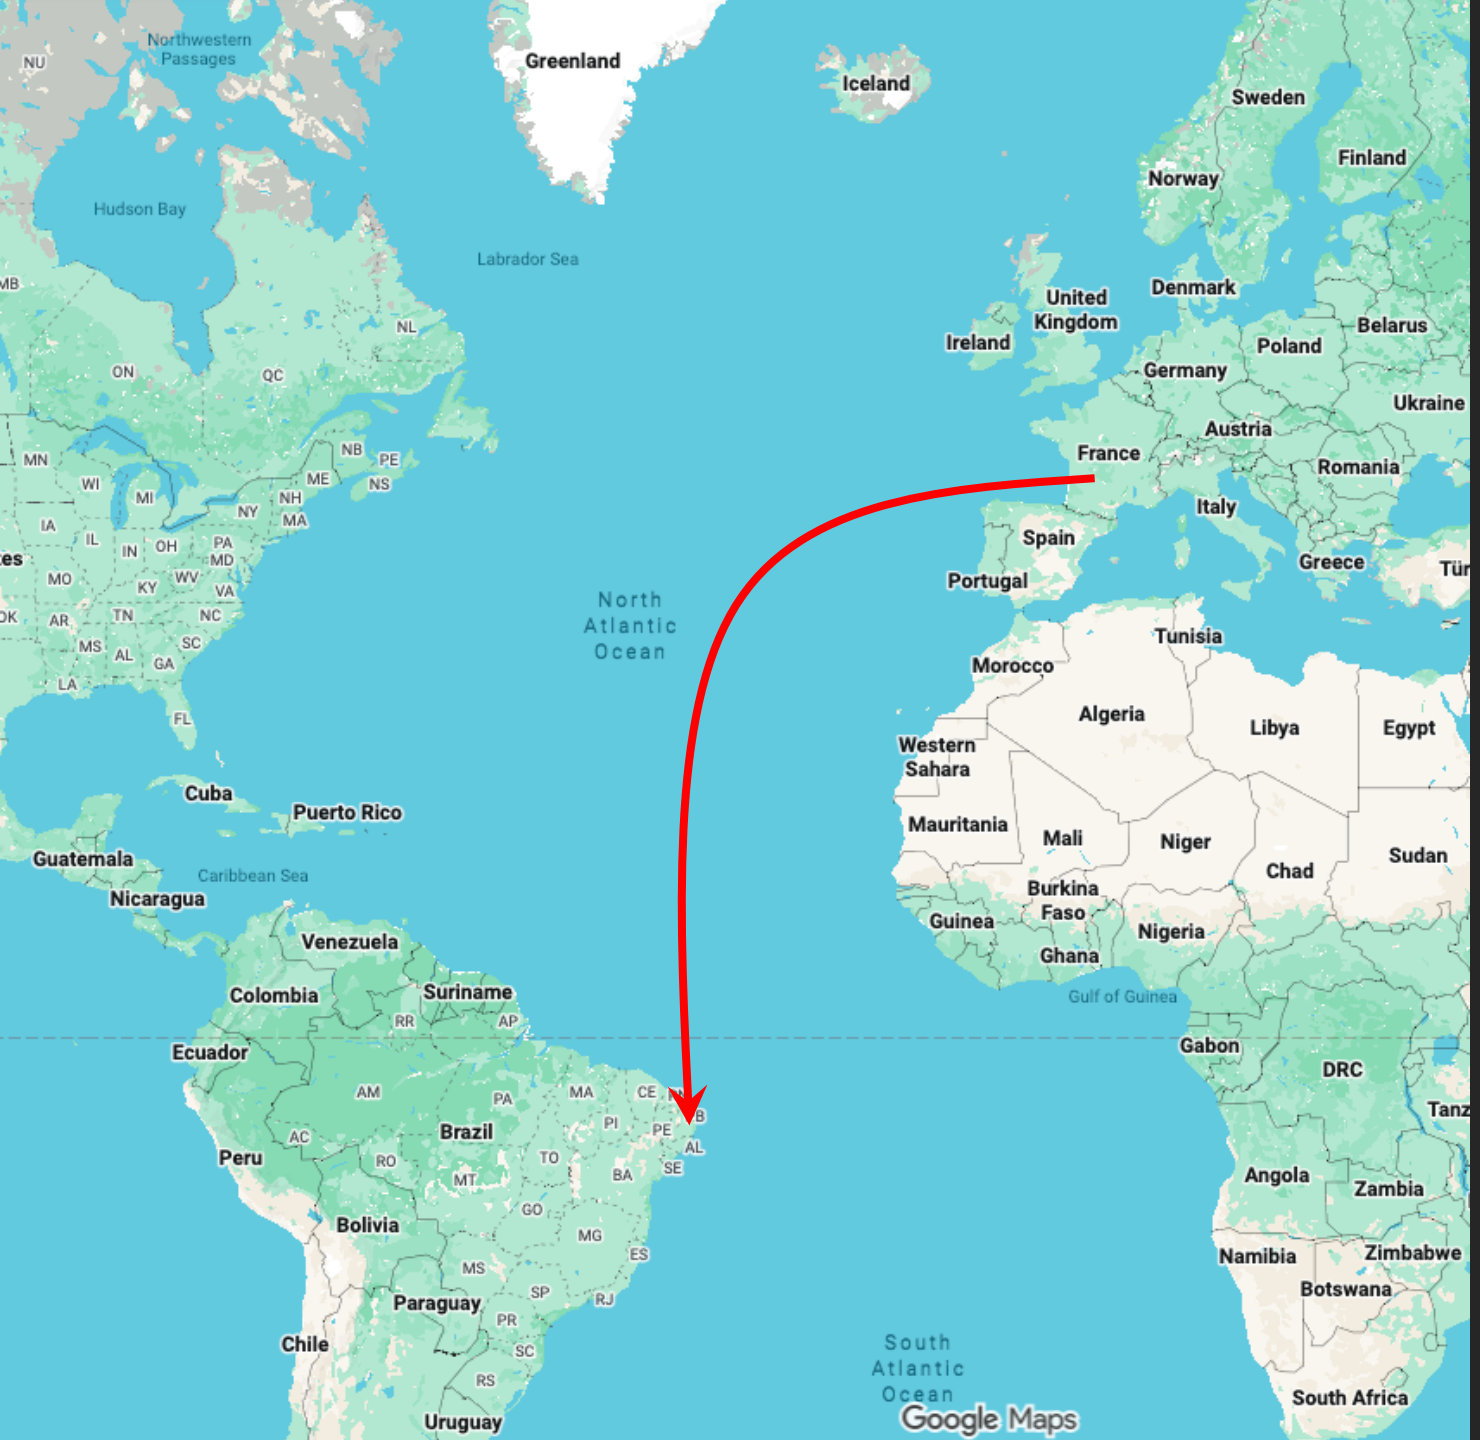

And then I got a scholarship and went to France, for an exchange year.

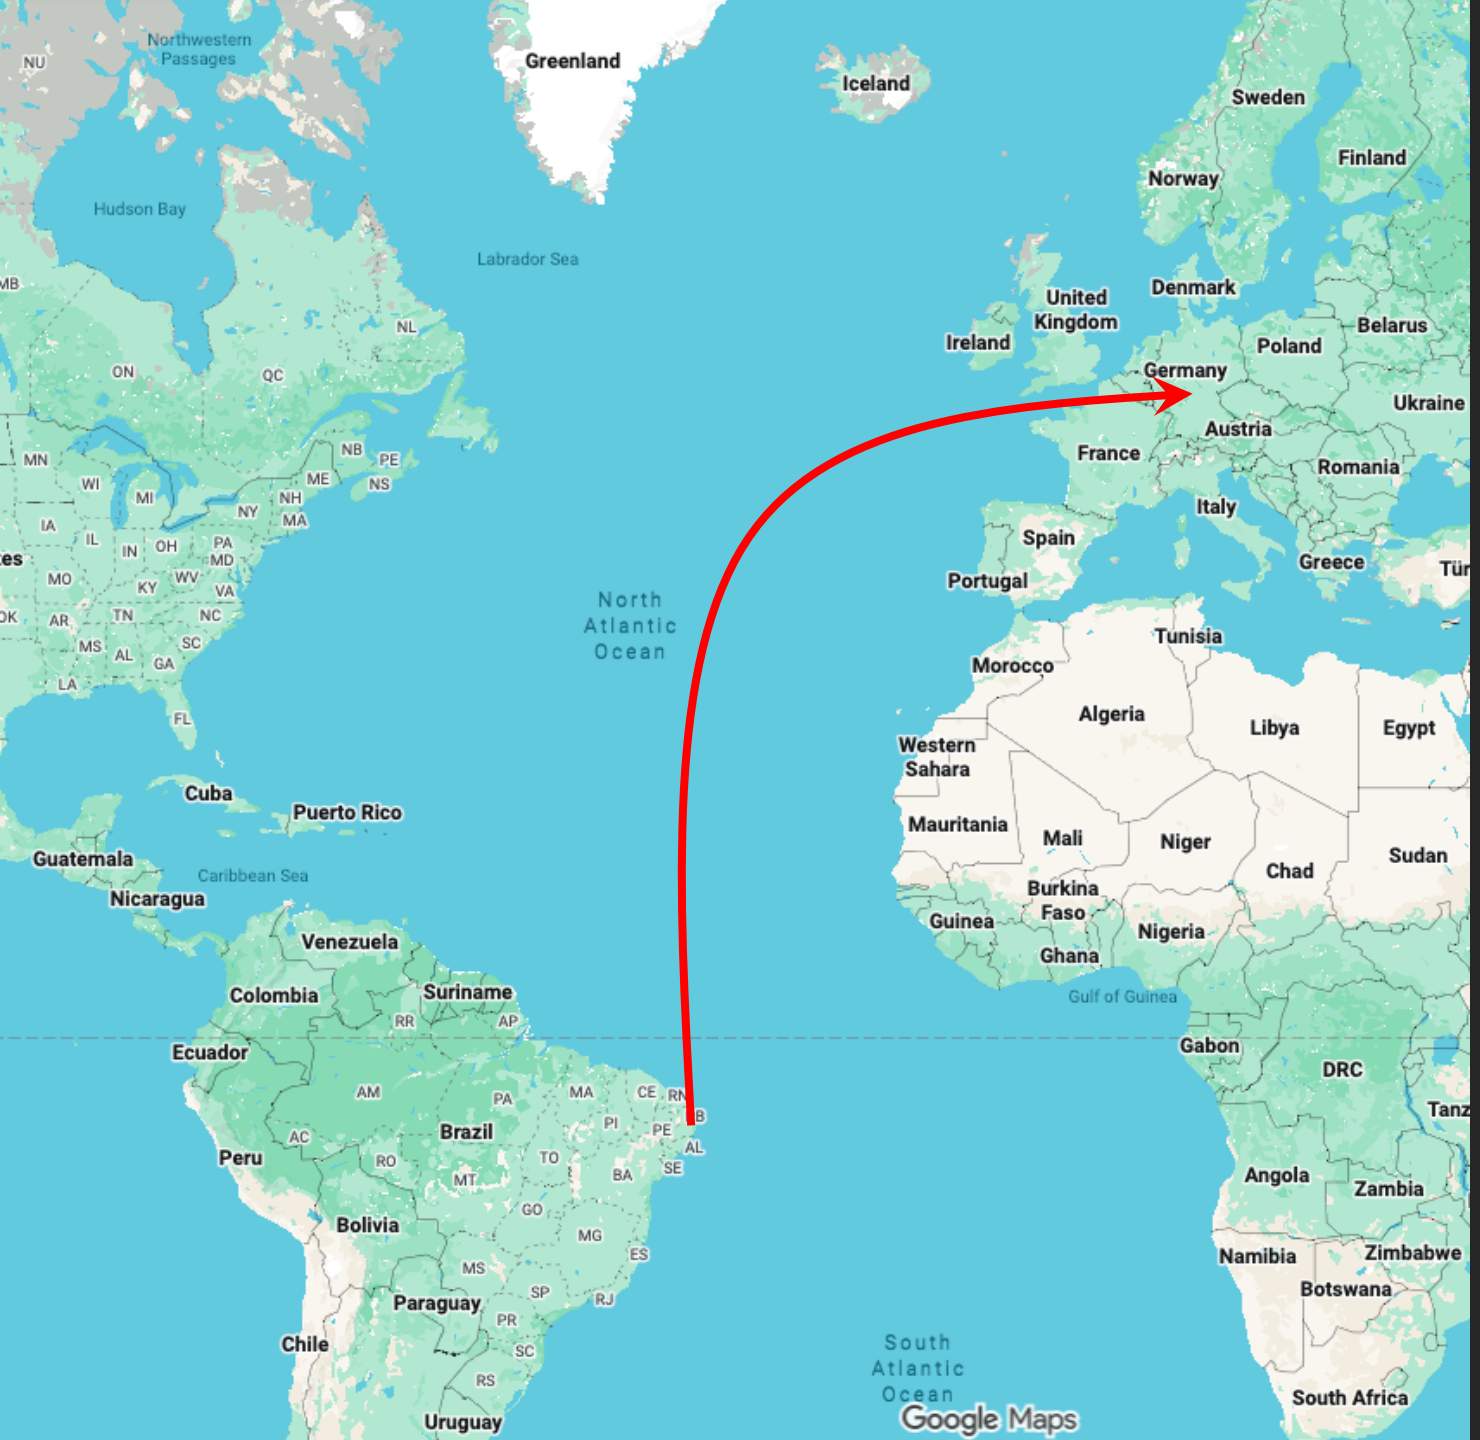

And then I got a scholarship and went to France, for an exchange year.

(not much English here. But it helped to make many American friends – and a girlfriend)

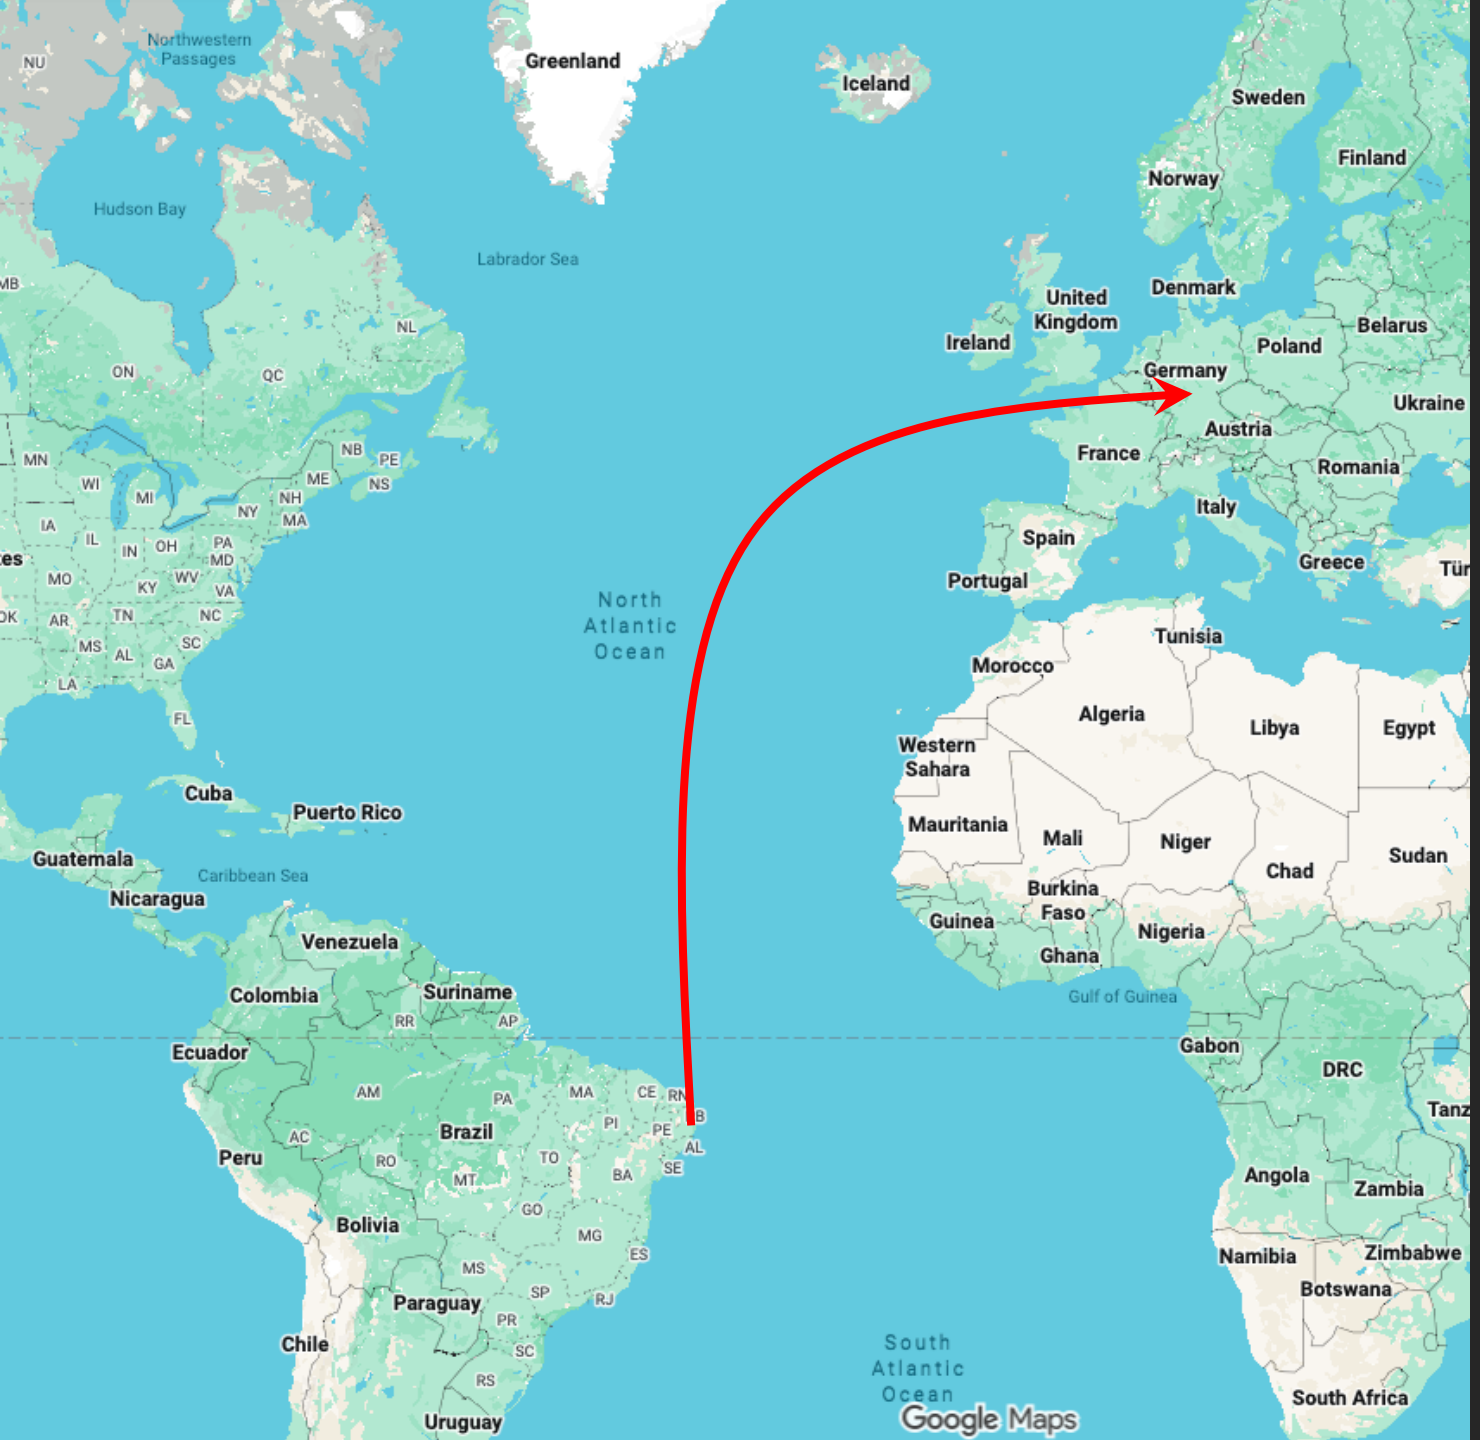

Came back to finish my University degree…

But then, before graduation…

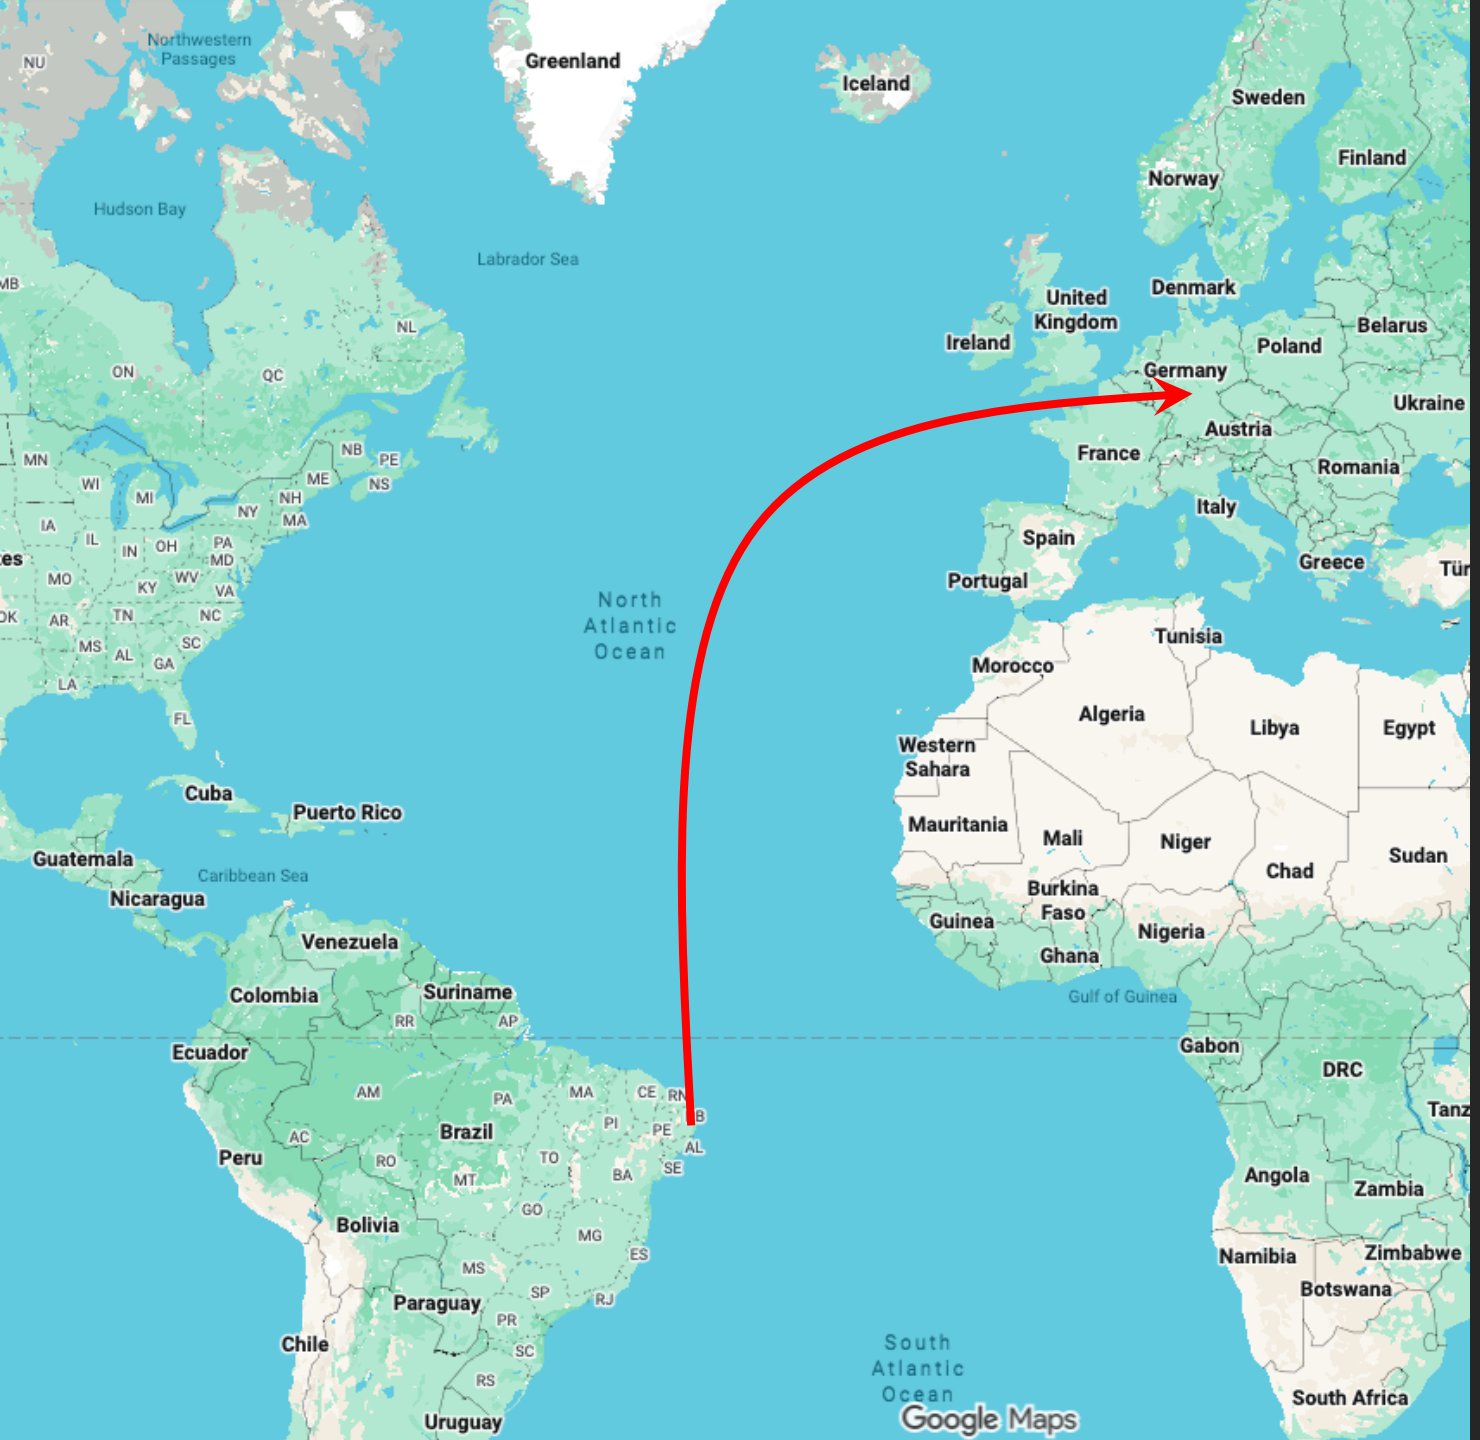

I went to Germany to do ~~one~~ two internships.

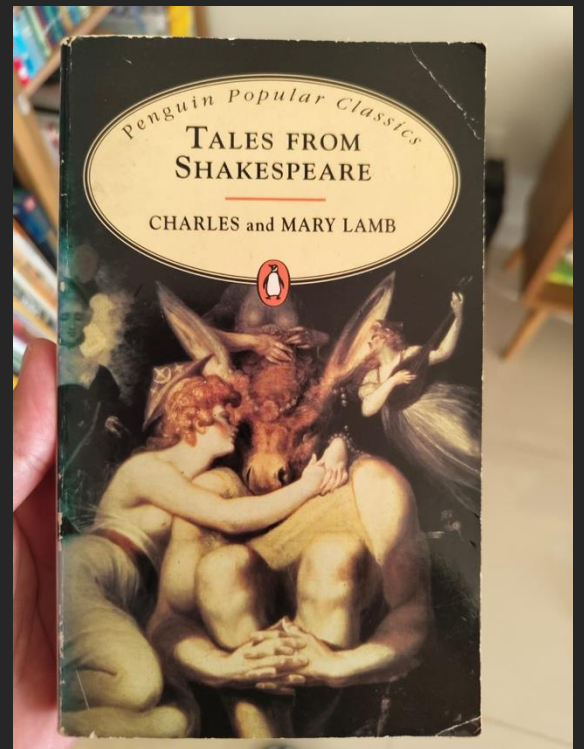

I went to Germany to do ~~one~~ two internships.

(English helped me a lot here, I actually didn't speak any German)

I went to Germany for ~~one~~ two internships.

(English helped me a lot here, I actually didn't speak any German)

Came back to Brazil, moved to Brasilia, started working for the government.

Having a good command of English opened many doors for me (interaction with foreign officials, international organizations such as The World Bank, OECD etc.).

And then, two decades later… I went to Sweden for a Master's Degree in Interactive Media Technology, at the Royal Institute of Technology.

When it comes to living abroad, even when things go wrong, it's almost always still a great experience.

